Executive Summary

A detailed and systematic web search supplemented with contact by email and Freedom of Information requests found that as of mid-2016 more than half of all local authorities across England (53%, n. 188) were not demonstrating compliance with the Specific Duties of the Equality Act 2010 and associated Government Equalities Office guidance (2011). If legislative deadlines are included, this rises to more than two thirds (69%, n. 243)

The presumption of progress over time is challenged by this data, as the number of local authorities failing to demonstrate compliance with this legislation has increased from 24% (n. 86) in early 2015, to 53% (n. 188) in mid-2016. Local authorities are not updating their equalities information, and in some cases have removed data and information from their websites.

Although there is a requirement for 'publicly available' information on actions arising from the Equality Act 2010, this research found that in many cases information was difficult to locate and not available on local authority webpages.

This indicates a decline in equalities work and some local authorities indicated that shrinking local authority budgets have impacted directly on their work on equalities. Some authorities are resistant to equalities work. Regardless of the cause, it is clear that there is a need to boost endeavours if the much-lauded Equality Act 2010 is to be fully implemented.

There were examples of LGBT-specific work from local authorities who did not demonstrate compliance with the Specific Duties, and many published information on Civil Partnerships and Same-Sex Marriage. However, 31% (n. 40) of those councils fully promoting same-sex marriage and civil partnerships either are doing no LGBT work or only very limited LGBT work.

Thus, evidence of action on LGBT equalities work contrasted with the wider availability of information about civil partnerships and same-sex marriage. The data here showed a notable improvement in providing such information between 2014/2015 and 2016 – as of 2016 only 24 (16% of eligible councils) did not provide full information on about same-sex marriage, civil partnerships and conversion of the latter to the former, improving on 62 (41%) in early 2015.

The report concludes by critically reflecting on the effectiveness of equalities legislation.

1. Introduction

1.1 Introduction to This Report

This report describes how local authorities are implementing the Equality Act 2010, specifically the setting of Equality Objectives and publishing details of compliance in relation to lesbian, gay, bisexual and trans (LGBT) people.

The Equality Act 2010 was seen as a watershed for equalities legislation in the UK (BBC, 2010). It enshrined 9 protected characteristics into law and required the public sector to respond to a) three General Public Sector Equality Duties: eliminate discrimination, advance equality of opportunity and foster good relations (Equality Act 2010, s 149); and b) additional Specific Duties (Equality Act 2010 Specific Duties Regulations 2011). This research was concerned with these Specific Duties. From the Act, the Government Equalities Office produced guidelines (2011) clarifying the Specific Duties, which were used to measure implementation of the guidelines in this research. Box 1 details the specific duties of this guidance that are relevant here.

Box 1: Public Sector Equality Duties (Specific Duties)

- publish information to show their compliance with the Equality Duty, at least annually; and
- set and publish equality objectives, at least every four years.

GEO 2011: 3

As Box 1 shows, information was due to be published annually, with the premise that setting objectives would work towards the goal of improving equality through incremental steps.

Examining information from local authorities about their equalities work offers insight into whether, and how, national statutes are being enacted at a local level. This report aims to inform ongoing debates regarding the practice of equalities.

In this report we:

- describe how the implementation of equalities legislation was reviewed, specifying the methods used in this study;
- provide an overview of the equalities legislation and criteria used to assess whether local authorities demonstrated compliance with the legislation;
- detail the findings of this research;
- conclude with key findings and reflections, and recommendations for further research.

1.2 Background

The Equality Act 2010 replaced and developed existing LGBT (and other) equalities legislation, incorporating the protected characteristics of Sexual Orientation and Gender Reassignment (Equality Act 2010 s 7 and 12). Legalisation can be an important driver of cultural change around responses to gender and sexual differences. Previous research, (for example, Browne and Bakshi, 2013; McGlynn 2014; Richardson & Monro 2012), has identified that Lesbian, Gay, Bi, Trans, Queer (LGBTQ) people regard legislation as an indicator of what the state (colloquially the 'government') is doing in relation to LGBTQ issues, and view local implementation of this (or not) as an indicator of local authorities' (colloquially 'the council' or 'the borough') commitment to addressing LGBTQ needs. The comparison between LGBTQ lives 'here' and those in other locations in the country (and beyond) often refers to legislation and legal status, and the effects of legislations.

Awareness of legislation, and expectations that it should be enacted, can crystallise a common agenda for those advocating for change (LGBTQ activists, both those working as part of local government and those positioned as consumers or users of services, or advocates) and those responsible for service provision (McGlynn 2014). Local authorities' LGBTQ 'friendliness' and commitment to addressing LGBTQ needs and equalities may, in part be judged according to whether and how statutory duties and legal requirements are fulfilled. Even when such legislation is disregarded, the 'gap' between what should be and what is, and aspirations for change, can be drivers for activism and change.

This research was carried out as part of Liveable Lives, an Economic and Social Research Council (ESRC)-supported project, that explores what makes life 'liveable' for LGBTQ people (see Appendix 1 for details of the project). Other parts of the Liveable Lives research project investigate the broader range of factors that LGBTQ people say are significant in their lives, including recent legislation. Acknowledging that legislation impacts on LGBTQ lives and the recent introduction of the Equality Act 2010 in the UK, the project audited website information from local authorities in England on implementation of the Act and subsequent duties imposed on local councils.

1.3 Methods used to review implementation of equalities legislation

This research reviewed websites to check fulfilment of a core duty of the Equality Act, which required publication of information to show compliance with the Act, and also as a source of information about implementation of other duties of the Equality Act 2010.

This research used the premise that information about equalities work would be made 'publicly accessible' though publication on local authority websites. Where information could not be found on websites, data collection was supplemented by requesting information directly from the local authority, enabling us to report on activity that demonstrated compliance but was not published on websites.

A desk-based search of information published on websites for the 353 local authorities in England, which are charged with the implementation of legislation at a local level, was carried out between November 2014 and January 2015. See Box 2 for brief details and Appendix 2 for further details.

Box 2: Data Collection For This Report

Data collected included:

- Information demonstrating the extent to which each local authority is compliant with measurable requirements of the Equality Act 2010. Data included whether or not councils met particular legislative demands, and also specific details of policies, documents and actions relevant under each aspect.
- Information about LGBT-related policy or actions which might not fit clearly under the legislation (such as LGBT staff groups or staff champions, accreditation by national LGBT rights organisation Stonewall, and so on) (see also McGlynn & Browne, 2011; McGlynn, 2012).

Where insufficient or no data was found, direct contact was made with the council. Contact was made with a dedicated equalities department or officer where possible, and otherwise via the council's general enquiries email address or phone number. Where no response was received, an additional email or (where possible) Freedom of Information request was sent. Not all councils responded to contact (see Section 2.1).

A second audit was undertaken in August 2016 to identify changes in how local authorities were complying with the Specific Duties of the Act. Using the legislation and guidance produced around the Act, this project used eight criteria to analyse the data collected (described in Table 1, below).

Limitations of this method of collecting data include:

- Information published on these websites may not encapsulate all activities that this research seeks to identify. The research addressed this by seeking additional information directly from local authorities.
- Information on websites is not corroborated externally and may or may not be checked by the authority publishing the information for current validity. Websites may overstate work being undertaken. Nonetheless, they give an important quantifiable snapshot of the national picture regarding the Equality Act 2010 and Local Authority implementation of this.

This research did not gather information about the impacts of this work, which may or may not be reported on websites and further research is needed to explore this aspect of the implementation and impact of the Equality Act 2010 (see for example, Sykes and Groom, 2016).

1.4 Criteria for measuring compliance of duties

Table 1 sets out how this research assesses local authorities against these duties, including the eight key criteria that were used during data collection:

Table 1: Criteria Used To Address Specific Duties

Duty as detailed by the GEO (see Box 1)	Criteria used in this research	Notes
Set and publish measurable Equality Objectives by deadlines stated in the Equality Act.	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Has the authority published specific, measurable Equality Objectives by the first and second deadlines? 2. What are these objectives? 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ○ The first deadline (for setting the first Equality Objectives) was April 2012. ○ The second deadline (for reviewing and updating the Equality Objectives) was April 2016.
Publish information to show compliance with the Equality Duty, at least annually.	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 3. How is compliance with the legislation demonstrated? 4. Has the authority published annual equalities monitoring of employees? 5. Are there any LGBT staff groups or staff champions? 6. Is the authority accredited by Stonewall? 7. Does the authority provide LGBT-related staff training or development? 8. Does the authority have any other LGBT-related policies, activities or initiatives? 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ○ Government advice does not specify how compliance should be demonstrated. ○ Criteria 3 and 4 respond specifically to the guidance for public sector organisations set out by the GEO (GEO 2011). These guidelines note a wide array of policies, actions and initiatives that might be part of demonstrating compliance. To ensure that attempts to demonstrate compliance were captured, and to address LGBT-specific actions, criteria 5-8 were developed. ○ Monitoring is not required to include sexual orientation or gender identity.

The information provided by each local authority assessed against these criteria, and judged to fall into one of 5 categories devised to report how well individual local authorities were meeting the Specific Duties of the Equality Act 2010 (Table 2):

Table 2: Categories of Complying With the Specific Duties

Category	Details
Category 1 (full compliance)	Councils clearly met each of the eight key criteria above, within the specified deadlines
Category 2 (full compliance but April 2016 deadline missed)	As above, but the councils consulted on and produced revised Equality Objectives after the April 2016 deadline
Category 3 (weak compliance)	Councils met the key criteria but there were a) notable difficulties in identifying or accessing the relevant information ⁱ , or b) councils doing the 'bare minimum' in their Equality Objectives or demonstration of compliance ⁱⁱ
Category 4 (not demonstrating compliance)	Councils not meeting one or more of the key criteria
Category 5 (unaware of legislation)	Councils which do not appear to mention the Equality Act or the Public Sector Equality Duties, or which are using outdated legislation instead

Following this, an assessment was made regarding the LGBT equality work being undertaken. The work was qualitatively coded as either undertaking LGBT equalities work or not, and those who were undertaking LGBT equalities work were coded once more to identify those who were undertaking limited work in this area. Limited work was categorised as: publicising LGBT-related compliances such as LGBT History Month; LGBT-related accreditation or charter mark without associated action; providing basic LGBT information on webpages; vaguely described or limited actions such as an LGBT section in libraries; or no evidence of action after 2012.

In addition to the Equality Act 2010, the Marriage (Same-Sex Couples) Act 2013 has been seen as demonstrating LGBT inclusion (The Guardian, 2014). There is no legislative requirement for local councils to provide details about same-sex marriages on their websites, but due to the perceived importance of this legislation, this research also reviewed how same-sex marriage, civil partnerships and conversions of civil partnerships to marriage were presented on councils' website. This report notes how many local authorities provided information about these three services (limited to those authorities that must provide them). Table 3 lists how this research assessed this data:

Table 3: Same-Sex Marriage and Civil Partnerships

Civil Ceremony	Criteria used in this research
Same-Sex Marriage	Has the authority provided details about how to have a Same-Sex Marriage?
Civil Partnership	Has the authority provided details about how to have a Civil Partnership?
Converting a Civil Partnership to a Same-Sex Marriage	Has the authority provided details about how to convert a Civil Partnership to a Same-Sex Marriage?

2. Findings

2.1 Availability of information

Government guidance (GEO 2011) indicates that information published to meet this legislation should be easily available to the public. However, it was often difficult to find the information on local authorities' websites. As of the first phase of data collection (2014-2015), only 39% (n. 136) of English local councils were judged to have published sufficient information under each factor of the data matrix on their website to demonstrate compliance of the duties. The remaining 61 % (n. 217) were contacted to request additional information to supplement data gathered from their websites.

Researchers found that local authorities' websites can be difficult to navigate, and this emerged as a complicating factor regarding councils' compliance of their duties under the Equality Act 2010 (see councils listed under Category 3 in Table 4, below). Additionally, when local councils were contacted directly or via Freedom Of Information (FOI) request, 63% of those councils asked (n. 136) either did not respond to requests for information (including direct emails) or did not provide sufficient information in their answer. For instance, some Freedom of Information (FOI) responses simply stated that a particular document or policy existed without providing details on what was contained within it, or without providing information about how to access or view these details.

Finally, during the second phase of data collection, the research found that 10% of all councils (n. 36) had removed a significant amount of equalities-related information from their websites between the first phase of data collection in 2014 and the second phase of data collection in 2016ⁱⁱⁱ.

2.2 Complying With the Specific Duties of the Equality Act

Table 4 summarises the compliance of the Public Sector Equality Duties of the Equality Act 2010, including how ratings in Phase 2 compared with these authorities' previous ratings in Phase 1:

Table 4: Categorising Compliance of Public Sector Equality Duties of the Equality Act 2010

	Phase 1 (Nov 2014 - Jan 2015)	Phase 2 (Aug 2016)	Change within and between the categories
Category 1 – full compliance	68% (n. 239)	27% (n. 95)	22% (n. 21) improved, 78% (n. 74) remained the same
Category 2 – full compliance but April 2016 deadline missed	N/A	16% (n.55)	15% (n.8) improved; 85% (n.47) worsened
Category 3 – weak compliance	8% (n. 30)	4% (n. 15)	40% (n. 6) improved, 60% (n. 9) worsened (Note small numbers)
Category 4 – not demonstrating compliance	22% (n. 78)	50% (n. 178)	1% (n. 2) improved, 30% (n. 53) stayed the same and 69% (n. 123) worsened
Category 5 – unaware of legislation	2% (n. 6)	3% (n. 10)	30% (n. 3) stayed the same, 70% (n.7) worsened (Note small numbers)

Overall, the research found that:

- As of Jan 2015, 68% of local authorities achieved full compliance, with a further 8% achieving weak compliance. 24% (Categories 4 and 5) did not demonstrate compliance.
- As of August 2016, the number of local authorities achieving compliance had decreased, with only 42% (Categories 1 & 2) achieving full compliance and of whom around a third (Category 2) missed the deadline for publishing this information. 53% (Categories 4 & 5) did not demonstrate compliance. This was primarily due to councils not publishing demonstration of compliance of duties annually (e.g. not presenting data for 2015 and/or 2016).
- If missing the April deadline is taken to count as not complying with the duty, then as of mid-2016 more than two thirds of local authorities (69%, n. 243) are not complying with key aspects of the Equality Act 2010.

Table 4 also shows that the majority of local authorities (53% n. 182) moved down a category in Phase 2 compared to Phase 1 (37% n. 130 remained the same), and only around 10% (n. 37) improved their rating, with 5% newly achieving a 'full compliance' rating. This demonstrates that it is possible to improve compliance with legislation under current circumstances, but it is concerning that the majority of councils got worse.

The research found evidence that austerity was a factor in this decline for some local authorities. For example, both Norwich City Council (2016: 3) and Leicester City Council (2015) made explicit statements about the impact of recent cuts to local authority budgets on equalities work.

Other councils challenged or resisted equalities work, Ribble Valley Borough Council (2016, category 4) responds to the Equality Duty by presenting a 'Common misunderstanding (sic) about the Equality Duty' page (box 3). Other local authorities similarly took pains to emphasise actions they were not required to take under the Equality Act, with an employee from Hambleton council responding 'There is no longer a requirement to undertake a formal EIA... At Hambleton we operate a system of embedded equality consideration across all our services... Should it be deemed necessary, and always mindful of data sensitivity and other confidentiality issues, this can be made available to the relevant parties through the consultation process'. (Hambleton 2015, personal correspondence, category 4 2014/2015, category 3 2016). While we recognise that equality-related processes in local authorities can indeed be reduced to tick box exercises without significant impact on local marginalised communities (see conclusion in Section 3), the emphasis in these examples (and others) appears to be on reducing workload and addressing accusations of political correctness and indeed 'treating everyone the same'.

Box 3: Ribble Valley Council: Common Misunderstanding about the Equality Duty Web Page

'Common Misunderstanding about the Equality Duty

The new Equality Duty should be applied in such a way as to not be an overly bureaucratic and burdensome approach, so that the focus is on performance, not process.

- The Equality Duty does not impose a legal requirement to conduct an Equality Impact Assessment. Nor is there is any practical need to conduct one. Compliance with the Equality Duty involves consciously thinking about the three aims of the Equality Duty as part of the process of decision-making. That will entail understanding the potential effects of the organisation's activities on different people, but there is no prescribed process for doing this. Keeping a simple record of how decisions were reached will help public bodies show how they considered the Equality Duty.
- The Equality Duty does not mean that public bodies have to examine equality issues where they are not relevant to the matter in hand.
- The Equality Duty does not require public bodies to take disproportionate action on equality.
- The Equality Duty does not require public bodies to treat everyone the same.
- The Equality Duty does not require public bodies to treat all religions as being equal or to treat all religious festivals equally.
- The Equality Duty does not require public bodies to make services homogeneous or to try to remove or ignore differences between people'

2.3 Complying With Duties Regarding Sexual Orientation and Gender Identity

Only 20 councils (6% of all councils) had Equality Objectives specifically aimed at LGBT people during the first phase of data collection (2014/2015). These were primarily objectives to develop better relationships with LGBT communities; to establish particular LGBT groups; and to tackle LGBT-related bullying. Only one council had set an Equality Objective specifically with regard to trans people (as opposed to more general LGBT equalities work), which was a commitment to support local trans projects.

39% (n. 136) of local authorities published information relating to employees and sexual orientation in 2014/2015. This fell to 33% (n. 116) in 2016. 26 (7%) of local authorities published information relating to employees and gender identities in 2014/2015. In 2016 this fell to 17 (5%). Therefore, monitoring of numbers of LGBT employees has decreased. This may be due to the overall drop in workforce monitoring reports being published, rather than LGB and T specifically being removed from monitoring.

In relation to the duty to publish information relating to employees and LGBT equalities, aside from the monitoring noted above the most common forms for this information to take were:

- Details of LGBT staff groups^{iv} (19% of councils, n. 67)
- Details of LGBT staff champions (2% of councils, n. 8)
- Accreditation by Stonewall as Diversity Champions or participation in Workplace Equality Index^v (15% of councils, n.52)
- General equality-related staff training/development^{vi} (77% of local councils, n. 272)
- LGBT-specific staff training/development (8% of local councils, n. 29) - this was often limited and specific to particular issues or jobs – libraries, hate crime, young people, transitioning staff etc.

In addition to the issues surrounding sexual orientation, some councils problematically listed ‘transgender’ as a third alternative to ‘male’ or ‘female’, which fails to allow trans people to list their chosen gender and their trans histories, while others conflated it with Sexual Orientation.

2.4 Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Trans-Specific Equalities Work

Some 194 (55%) of councils did not meet the criteria of full compliance but nonetheless published information about (sometimes extensive) work around local LGBT equalities. Aside from work explicitly connected to the duties of the Equality Act 2010, these English local authorities had developed policy, actions or initiatives regarding LGBT people. However, of these authorities almost a third (32%, n. 62) were doing equalities work which only involved limited actions, such as promoting LGBT History Month or hosting an LGBT section in a local library (see Table 5).

Table 5 indicates that amongst local authorities who are complying with the Specific Duties of the equalities legislation (Category 1 - full compliance), 80% (n. 76) are undertaking some form of LGBT work, compared to 66% (n. 4) of those who are unaware of the legislation. Whilst examining the implementation of equalities legislation serves as an indicator of action by local authorities for LGBT equalities, 95 councils who do not perform well on this measure (categories 4 and 5) are undertaking some LGBT work.

Table 5: Councils Doing LGBT-Specific Equalities Work by Category of Compliance

Category	Total Number of Councils Doing LGBT-Specific Equalities Work	% Of This Total Which Have Only Limited Actions on LGBT Specific Equalities
Category 1 – full compliance (n. 95)	65% (n. 62)	23% (n. 14)
Category 2 – full compliance but April 2016 deadline missed (n. 55)	56% (n. 31)	36% (n. 11)
Category 3 – weak compliance (n. 15)	40% (n. 6)	33% (n. 2)
Category 4 – not complying (n. 178)	52% (n. 92)	34% (n. 31)
Category 5 – unaware of legislation (n. 10)	30% (n. 3)	33% (n. 1)

Box 4 details some examples of laudable LGBT specific work being undertaken across three categories. Further work is needed to explore the effectiveness and outcomes of this work and the links to broader equalities work/legislative compliance.

Box 4: Examples of LGBT Work Without Full Compliance With Specific Duties

In 2016 Bristol City Council (Category 2, full compliance but April 2016 deadline missed) had not updated their Equality Objectives per the April 2016 deadline, however their website detailed specific Equality Objective actions to improve monitoring of LGBT people and homophobia; a community survey on and consultation with local trans people; a community survey on and consultation with LGB people; specific work in local libraries; an LGBT youth group; multiple forms of guidance around LGBT people in the workplace; documents to improve LGBT awareness; funding local groups such as LGBT Bristol; and signposting to a number of local and national LGBT groups and helplines.

In 2014 Stockton On Tees Borough Council (Category 3, weak compliance) had weakly mainstreamed Equality Objectives but held annual events for LGBT History Month and events for LGBT Adopting And Fostering Week.

In 2014 Hinckley & Bosworth Borough Council (Category 4, non-compliance) had no identifiable Equality Objectives but had signed up to LGBT-specific policy points in a partnership Equality Scheme, and had undertaken some work to improve LGBT awareness in rural areas.

2.5 Information About Same-Sex Marriages and Civil Partnerships

Of the 353 English local authorities, 153 (43%) provide marriage services including same-sex marriages, civil partnerships and the conversion of civil partnerships to same-sex marriages (where desired).

In the first phase of data collection (2014/2015), of the 153 councils that provide these services, one eligible council had no details on same-sex marriages or civil partnerships and four eligible councils had no details on same-sex marriages. However, 62 (41% of eligible councils, including the 4 lacking details on civil partnerships and/or same-sex marriage) had no details on converting existing civil partnerships to same-sex marriages, an option that became available following legislation implemented in December 2014. While there is no specific legislative requirement to do so, the majority of English local councils that carry out these civil ceremonies are making information about them publicly available.

During the second phase of data collection (2016), many of these councils had updated their websites and only 24 (16% of eligible councils) were found not to provide details of civil partnerships, same-sex marriages, and conversion of the former to the latter.

Of those councils providing full information regarding same-sex marriages, civil partnerships and the conversion of civil partnerships to same-sex marriages (129 out of the 153 eligible), 21 did not report any LGBT equality work and 19 are doing weak/limited LGBT equality work. Thus, 31% (n. 40) of those councils fully promoting same-sex marriage either are doing no LGBT work or only very limited LGBT work.

This research found an increase from Jan 2015 to Aug 2016 in the number of local authorities providing information on their website about civil partnerships, same-sex marriages, and the conversion of civil partnerships to marriages. In the same period, there was a decrease in the number of local authorities fulfilling the requirements of the Equality Act 2010 (see Section 2.2). This demonstrates inconsistency in response to different pieces of legislation addressing LGBTQ issues, and reveals that while some legislation is widely celebrated and implemented, other LGBTQ work is side-lined.

3. Conclusion

Box 5 indicates the overall key findings from the data collected. This report will conclude by providing some brief reflections on equalities legislation.

Box 5: Key Findings

This report has shown that:

1. There are issues with local authorities' compliance with the Equality Act 2010, and compliance with this legislation declined between 2014 and 2016.
2. Whilst some LGBT work is reported by local authorities who are not meeting the Specific Duties (publishing Equality Objectives and demonstrating compliance), more of those who are better at meeting these duties are undertaking more LGBT-specific work.
3. Whilst some of this work is robust in its approach to LGBT equalities, other local authorities just mark events like IDAHOBIT (International Day Against Homophobia, Transphobia and Biphobia) and LGBT History Month.
4. More local authorities promote same-sex marriage than undertake LGBT specific equalities work, even though there is no legal obligation to do so.
5. Whilst councils should be demonstrating compliance with the legislation, the quality of the work being undertaken is important. This research has not investigated the effectiveness of the legislation and associated guidance in meeting the wider General Public Sector Equality Duties of 'eliminating discrimination', 'advancing equality of opportunity' and 'fostering good relations' for LGBT people (Equality Act 2010, s 149).

Legislation that provides protections and seeks equalities can have significant effects on cultural inclusions for some LGBT people. An audit of compliance with legislation such as this offers data that can be used locally to highlight the strengths and weaknesses in local practice compared to other areas. The Equality Act 2010 and associated Government Equalities Office guidelines (2011) set out a number of criteria by which local authorities can be held to account. These can be useful in dialogues with local authority staff/departments seeking to advance all forms of equalities work, including LGBTQ equalities. However, focusing only on legislation and legislative compliance could also neglect to account for some work that is being undertaken on LGBTQ issues. This may fail to engage with the outcomes and impacts of local authority actions and initiatives, which ultimately are the focus of LGBTQ demands for equalities. Conversely, while legislation is often used as a measure of 'homophobia' or 'LGBT friendliness', this report demonstrates that this legislation is variously implemented, and it is not possible to ascertain if this implementation is having a tangible effect on LGBT lives.

In the UK equalities legislation exists and imposes duties, however further exploration is needed to interrogate how (or whether) this legislation and associated guidance can work towards the goal of the Equality Act 2010, that is, to eliminate discrimination. Public sector workers themselves are critically aware that actions to comply with legislation may be performed as a bureaucratic 'tick box exercise', and that even when undertaken with the 'spirit' of the policy in mind they may still fail to genuinely identify and tackle LGBT equality issues (Ahmed, 2012; McGlynn, 2014; Richardson & Monro, 2013). The legislation also mandates publicly accessible measures through which local authorities can be held to account by local people in marginalised groups. Where these do not exist, this report has shown that certain LGBT equalities work can occur, and other evidence suggests that this is often undertaken by individuals and small groups (see for example Ahmed, 2012; Cooper, 1994; Cooper & Monro, 2003).

Despite claims of legislative advances, for decades academics and activists have been critical of same-sex marriage as a driver for change for LGBTQ people, seeing this as part of systematic efforts to privilege certain groups over others (see for example Bernstein & Taylor, 2013; Duggan, 2003; Warner, 1999). This data indicates that their fears may be well founded, where other LGBT work is not undertaken by local government that publicise information regarding same-sex marriage. Further work to explore this finding is needed, including assessing the efficacy of the work undertaken, and acknowledging that local authorities are complex and multifarious organisations.

Appendix 1: Details of The Liveable Lives Project

Liveable Lives is an Economic and Social Research Council (ESRC)-supported project (grant number ES/M000931/1) and a collaboration between academics and activists working with LGBTQ people in the UK and India to explore what makes life 'liveable' for LGBTQ people. Other aspects of the Liveable Lives research project explore the broader range of factors that LGBTQ people say are significant in their lives, including recent legislation. Acknowledging the ways in which legislation impacts on LGBTQ lives, the project audited website information from local authorities in England on implementation of the Equality Act 2010 and subsequent duties imposed on local authorities, alongside a number of other research activities. For further information about the project, visit <https://liveablelives.org/>.

Box 6: The Liveable Lives Project In Brief

- Aim: to explore what makes lives 'liveable' for LGBTQ people in India and the UK.
- Partners: Liveable Lives works in partnership with LGBTQ activists and academics and Kolkata-based LBT activist forum Sappho For Equality (<http://www.sapphokolkata.in/>).
- Funding: Liveable Lives is funded by the ESRC.
- Methods and data collection: Liveable Lives uses participatory mixed methods research:
 - 5 UK Project Workshops (Brighton x1, Southampton x1, Leicester x1, Hull x2) – including individual interviews, group discussions, mapmaking, timelines, collages
 - 5 India Project Workshops (Siliguri x1, Kolkata x2, Kolkata surrounding area x2) including group discussions, mapmaking, timelines, collages
 - 26 in-depth interviews (India)
 - 5 online surveys via the project website (<https://liveablelives.org/>)
 - Online discussion forum via the project website
 - 6x LGBTQ street theatre workshops and 5x performances (India & UK)
 - 3x desk-based reviews (1 of global indices relating to LGBTQ equalities; 2 exploring media discussion of LGBTQ rights and legislation in India; and of the implementation of equalities legislation in the UK).

Appendix 2: Data Collection Details

Data was initially gathered from November 2014 to January 2015 (with some additional details provided directly by some councils until March 2015) by visiting each council's website in turn (following Browne, 2012). The initial website search involved a visual scan of the front page and any list of services/departments for any equality-related information. Searches of the website via embedded search tools^{vii} followed this, and policies or documents mentioned but not linked to were also searched for in this way. Where embedded search tools appeared not to function or where they returned no hits, an external search via Google was performed. This often returned information not found by the embedded search tool, suggesting that LGBT equalities information is not foregrounded on websites and is difficult to locate. Where insufficient or no data was found, direct contact was made with the council. Contact was made with a dedicated equalities department or officer where possible, and otherwise via the council's general enquiries email address or phone number. Where no response was received, an additional email or (where possible) Freedom of Information request was sent. Not all councils responded to contact.

Where no Equality Objectives were found, but a list of clear equality-related aims framed around the Equality Act 2010 existed, these were taken to be Equality Objectives.

During the analysis of the extensive data collected from late 2014 to early 2015, many local authorities' responses to the Equality Act 2010 and the Public Sector Equality Duties appeared formative. The researchers also noted the Act's emphasis on the annual nature of publishing to take place with regard to demonstrating compliance with the duties. Furthermore, on April 6th 2016 a legislative deadline came into play, by when councils should have updated their Equality Objectives (Equality Act 2010 (Specific Duties) Regulations 2011, s 3(1)(b)). Therefore, a second period of data collection was undertaken. The aim of this data collection phase was more limited – specifically, to identify any changes in how local authorities were demonstrating compliance with the Specific Duties of the Equality Act 2010. This phase used the review of websites only (with no direct contact or Freedom of Information (requests), regarding Equality Objectives, means of demonstrating compliance, workforce equalities monitoring and (to capture other legislative details) information regarding same-sex marriage, civil partnerships, and the conversion of the latter to the former.

While LGBT equalities legislation specifically engages with schools and education, local authorities' work with schools was not included in the data collection as this would necessitate a much more detailed exploration of thousands of schools, beyond the scope of this project (for more information see Crown, 2014).

ⁱ Many councils were also included in this count if they said that their Equality Objectives had been 'mainstreamed' via their overarching corporate or institutional objectives. The Equality Act 2010 (Specific Duties) Regulations 2011: 3.3 require that set objectives be 'specific and measurable', and when 'mainstreamed' in such a manner it often became unclear which of these corporate objectives were to be taken as Equality Objectives (not specific) and therefore also unclear how these were to be engaged with and accounted for with regard to Protected Characteristics (not measurable). Not all councils, which 'mainstreamed' their Equality Objectives fall into this category, as some, did clearly identify them.

ⁱⁱ With regard to Equality Objectives, this includes councils which set only one or two extremely broad and dubiously measurable objectives; objectives which simply repeated the three General Public Sector Equality Duties; or objectives which did not appear to address the protected characteristics specifically (such as commitments to reduce obesity or support business). With regard to demonstrating compliance with the legislation, this includes councils that produced only cursory evidence such as a single short Equality Impact Assessment.

ⁱⁱⁱ This excludes information that was missing due to apparent website errors.

^{iv} Includes those local councils that are in the process of setting up an LGBT staff group or which clearly signpost staff to regional public sector LGBT staff groups. Does not include 'general' equalities staff groups.

^v Note that this does not include Stonewall's education-related awards due to the specific focus on local councils and not schools (see Appendix 2).

^{vi} General equalities training which may or may not include elements of LGBT-related training.

^{vii} Search terms included LGB, LGBT, lesbian, gay, bisexual, trans*, queer, Stonewall, Equality Framework for Local Government, EFLG, Public Sector Equality Duty, PSED, Equality Act and equality*. An asterisk () indicates a wildcard search which would find the searched term plus all possible suffixes – therefore 'trans' would find trans, transsexual, transgender etc. Not all embedded search engines permitted wildcard searches and therefore manual searches for key suffixes were necessary. Note that EFLG searches proved particularly important as these results sometimes included valuable equality-related information which was not available on councils' main equalities webpages.
